NEW STUDY DEMONSTRATES OSHA EXCESSES ON REGULATIONS

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. Chamber of Commerce today said a Congressional Research Service (CRS) study on environmental tobacco smoke raises serious questions about excessive government regulations issued by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

"This latest study points to another blatant example of excessive regulation from OSHA bureaucrats who seem more interested in paperwork than public health," said Bruce Josten, senior vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

"This is why it is crucial that government bureaucrats be required to use sound science when attempting to regulate American jobs," Josten added.

The CRS study questions the prior assumption EPA and OSHA on the dangers of second hand smoke.
